In the year 1519 Hernán Cortez reached the Valley of Mexico and saw a sight he did not expect to see...

A jewel of a city, gleaming white in the sunlight and floating in the middle of a vast lake!
The splendor and magnificence of the city rivaled the pyramids of Egypt, and the temples of Greece and Rome!

Who were these people?

Anthropology 214
Introduction to Mesoamerican Archaeology
Sally Llull Billings, M.A. professor of Anthropology

The study of prehistoric and Protohistoric cultures and areas of Mexico and Central America, including the Aztecs and the Mayans

- Satisfies course requirements for the AA degree in Anthropology
- Satisfies course requirements for the Latin Studies program
- It is transferable to all institutions in the State of Nevada
- Course materials are presented using a variety of mediums such as Power Point slide, videos, chapter summaries, and real and replicated stone tools
- Course syllabus, Power Point slides, exams, and homework assignments available on WebCT

- This is a valuable course for students who are majoring in:
  - History
  - Art
  - Education
  - World Literature
  - World History
  - Geography
  - Political Science
  - General education
  - Environmental Studies
  - Women’s Studies
  - Travel and Tourism